high-profile results

Women seeking to increase their bust size can benefit from high-profile implants that add projection without lateral spread, according to Sydney cosmetic surgeon Dr Joseph Tiong. Francis Herron reports.

The new generation of high-profile breast implants are providing excellent results for flat-chested women who need an augmentation procedure, according to Sydney cosmetic surgeon Dr Joseph Tiong.

He says he is seeing many young women who are aged between 20 and 30 and seeking breast augmentation procedures because they have very small breasts. He notes they often suffer low self-esteem and lack social confidence as a result, as well as having difficulty in finding clothes that fit well.

'Some of these women that I see have really no breast development,' Dr Tiong says. Quite often they are also very slender which, in the past, has raised problems with finding an appropriate implant size. 'The base of the implant must relate to the chest wall dimensions,' he explains. 'Now there is a new implant which has just come on the market, that caters for this patient group.'

Dr Tiong says he has been using TSX textured soft-touch gel implants from Allergan. These implants give a high projection for small breasts and are made from gel with strong cohesiveness but engineered to provide a natural-feeling texture. 'They offer a very good solution for women who are thin or very flat-chested,' he says. 'They're also well suited to women who have lost breast volume through breastfeeding. For these patients, where skin laxity has caused their breasts to take on a collapsed appearance, the high-profile breast implants give them back their shape.'

Quite often, Dr Tiong says, breast augmentation can be combined with liposuction to restore the patient's pre-pregnancy figure, while young women who want significantly bigger breasts are also good candidates for high-profile implants. 'In the past, larger implants tended to look too wide, with lateral bulging and a fake appearance. With the TSX you get high projection without the increased width at the base.'

All Dr Tiong's breast augmentation procedures are performed in day surgery and he says they are generally straightforward, however, he stresses that he places a strong emphasis on attentive post-operative care. acsm
